Risk Regulation in 3-D:
How to See (and Balance) Benefits and Costs
as They Truly Are

Adam Finkel is the first executive director of the Penn Program on Regulation and is also a fellow at the Law School. He is one of the nation’s leading experts in the evolving field of risk assessment and cost-benefit analysis, with 20 years of experience improving methods of analysis and making risk-based decisions to protect workers and the general public from environmental hazards. He comes to Penn Law from the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey (UMDNJ) School of Public Health, where he is a Professor of Environmental and Occupational Health. For the past three years, he has also been a Visiting Professor of Public and International Affairs at the Woodrow Wilson School at Princeton University. From 1995 to 2000, he was Director of Health Standards Programs at the U.S. Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA), and was responsible for promulgating and evaluating regulations to protect the nation’s workers from chemical, radiological, and biological hazards. From 2000 to 2003, he was OSHA’s Regional Administrator for the Rocky Mountain states. He recently received the David Rall Award from the American Public Health Association for “a career in advancing science in the service of public health protection.”
