What do you do when you have almost three pounds of leftovers from a the world’s largest papaya? What do you do when you have almost that much leftover pork steaks, from a 5 ½ pound pork loin? I guess you could learn not to make that much pork when you are also serving a side of salmon and a dozen burgers.

Or you could learn to eat papaya and pork steaks for breakfast. Again, like yesterday. And, probably, like tomorrow.

Guess what we’re having for lunch?
